OUTFOX THE FOX

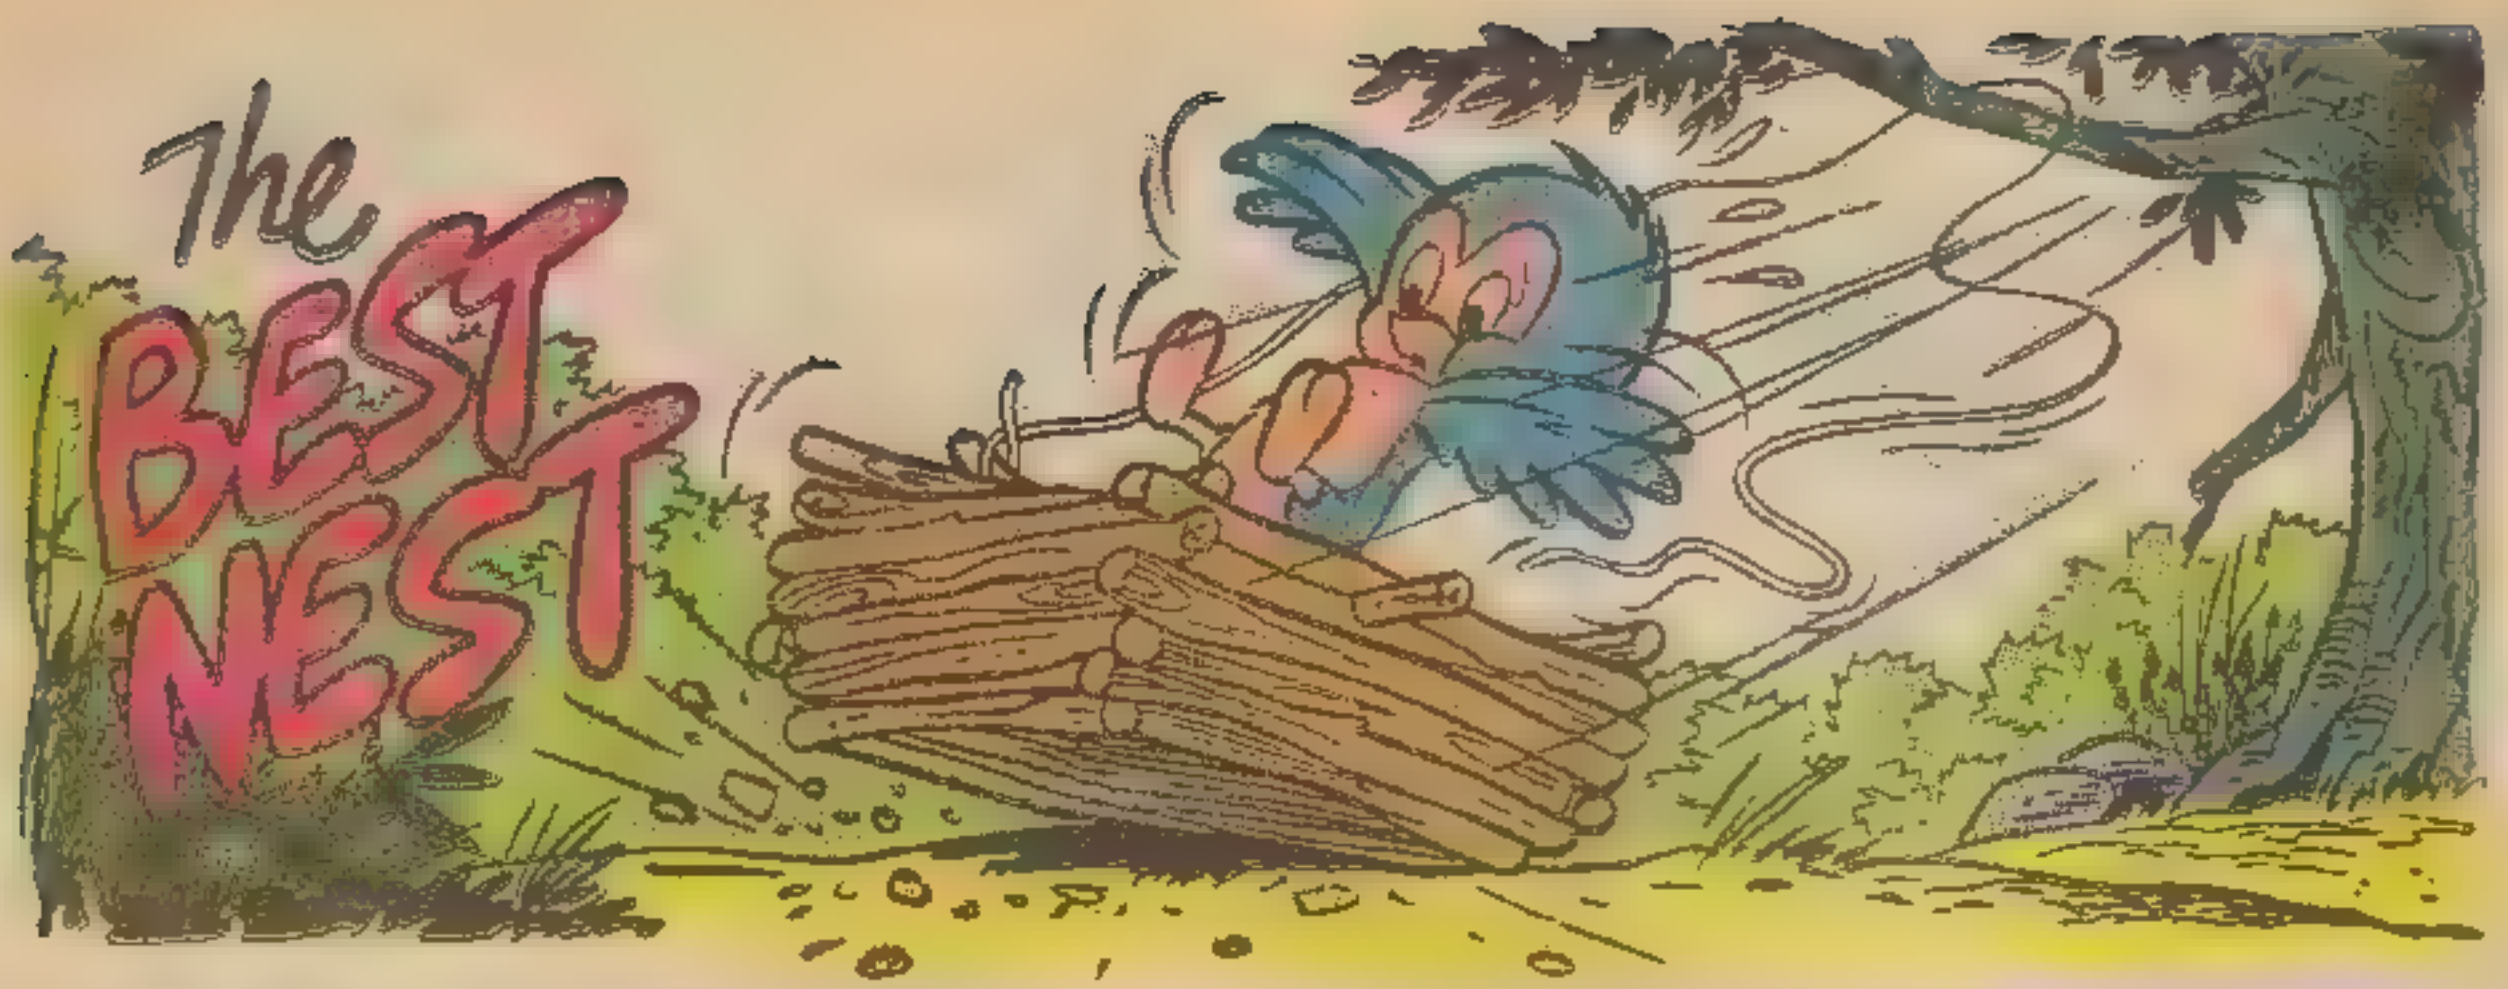

"It's here, it's here," chirped Bertie Bird, tearing the paper off the package the postman had left. "It's my new 'do-it-yourself' kit!"

He unfolded a sheet of directions. "An easy-to-build oriole's nest," he read, "for the beginning nest builder."

"Who wants to live in an oriole's nest and swing from a branch like a hanging basket?" protested Billie. "This old nest is good enough for me."

"An oriole's nest'll be pretty nifty next summer when it starts to get hot," said Bertie, lifting out a bunch of packaged twigs. "Fit twig one into notch in twig two," he read from the directions. "Billie, you bring the rest of the twigs," he added, flying off to the elm tree he had chosen for their new home.

"Now, how are you going to hang it on the end of a branch?" Billie asked, when they had almost finished the job.

"That's what these strings are for," said Bertie, consulting the directions. "Fasten string B firmly to twig seven," he read. "Loop over a slender elm branch, slip, and bind."

"What's this 'slip and bind' stuff?" Billie inquired. "Maybe you can ask Mrs. Oriole."

Two minutes later Bertie streaked back, his feathers ruffled. "She said that how to build an oriole's nest was none of my business," he reported. "And she and her husband chased me home. They've got sharp bills, too," he added.

"You're licked then, Bertie," said his brother. "You can never figure it out."

"I can so," twittered Bertie. "I was watching Mrs. Oriole yesterday, and I just know I can do it."

"Don't make a fool of yourself," said his brother. "I see Mr. and Mrs. Oriole watching us from their nest."

Bertie had already picked up the end of string B. He took off at high speed and looped the loop around the elm branch. "Where's twig 38?" he inquired. "It says in the directions to knot the loose end of string B firmly to twig 38."

"Tie a hard knot," warned Billie. But Bertie had taken off with the second string.

"It's finished," said Bertie two flights later, as he knotted string Z to twig 47.

"Don't brag," advised Billie. "You still haven't hung it on the end of a branch."

"That's easy," said Bertie. "I'll sit on the nest, and you give me a shove off this branch. Wait till Mrs. Oriole sees this."

"I don't like to do this," said Billie, bracing his feet and pushing.

Off went the nest into the air. Back and forth it swung; then SNE went string Z, and SNAP went string B, and down went the nest with poor Bertie aboard. "Ouch," said Bertie as he struck the ground.

"Ha, ha, ha," laughed Mr. and Mrs. Oriole, whizzing around Bertie's head. "So you thought YOU could build an oriole's nest, did you?"

"It was a long way down from that elm branch," said Billie, helping his brother home to Apple Tree Lane. "Are you all right?"

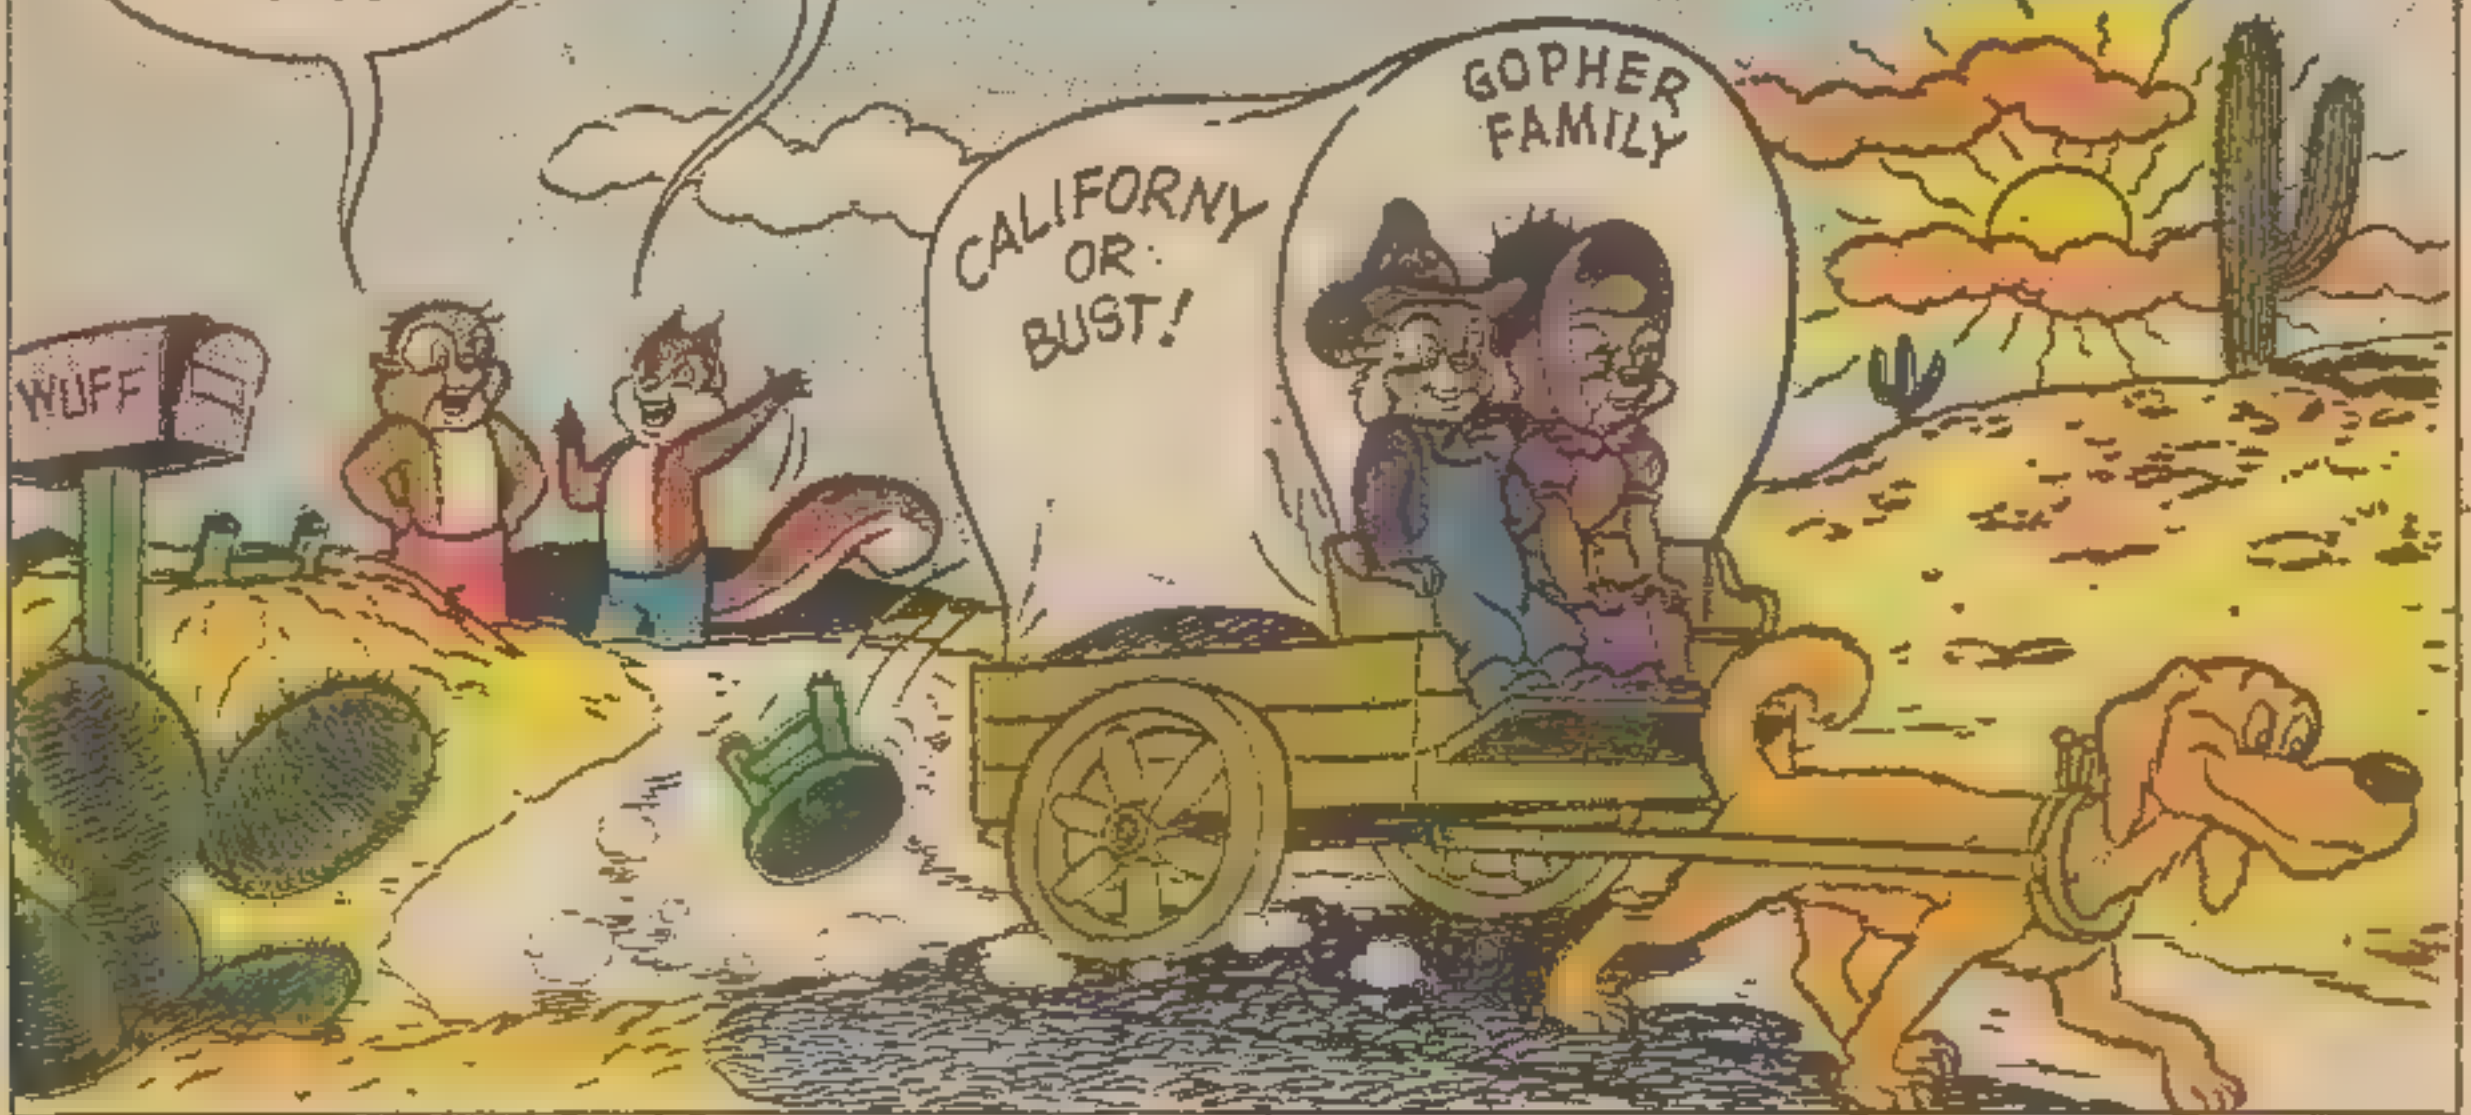

"Sure," said Bertie. "I'm kind of lame, and I'll be stiff in the morning, but it was great fun swinging back and forth in the air. At any rate, I can tell you one thing. When I get so I can sit down again, it's going to feel kind of good to have our good old solid nest to sit down in."
